President Dave's Message

I find that many folks my age (pushing 70) choose for many reasons not to use technology. I see that routinely as I am involved in various car projects and others such as coordinating my high school 50th reunion. Certainly that is a personal choice and many friends tell me that they had enough technology when they were game fully employed. In my circumstance using technology is a carryover from when I served as a technology dean in a community college environment. I always made sure that I told folks that I was a manager of technology not a technologist who manages.

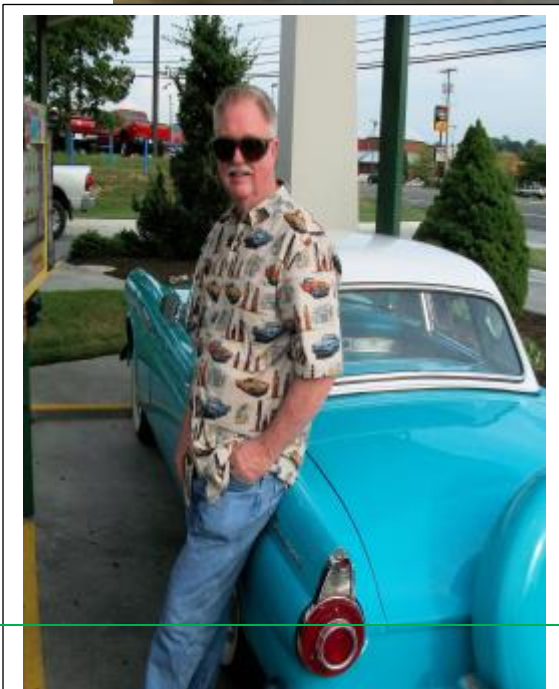

So by now you may be asking, what in the world does that have to do with our automotive hobby? Well the answer is plenty. In many circumstances when I'm looking how to accomplish some automotive related task I simply look it up in YouTube. I've found pretty much anything I'm looking for information on has already been documented on a video clip.

I've saved a lot of time and frustration by doing searches on such topics as troubleshooting power window problems on the '89 Saleen. Additionally, Facebook Forums have been a treasure trove of information in doing car for sale searches and locating needed parts. Most recently, I learned from a Facebook Saleen Forum that blood pressure cuff bulbs are the perfect source for replacing the long gone bulbs on the Flofit seat lumbar support hoses. Ebay is also a great source for locating obscure parts for my car refurbishment projects. I was lucky enough to find greatly discounted almost new 6.95X14 reproduction tires for the 64 ½ on E-Bay.

While technology can often overwhelm us with its intricacies and baffle us with its problems, like I used to tell our faculty at in-service workshops, pick and choose technology resources that you need to accomplish a task. It certainly can work for a car hobbyist. Happy motoring! Dave
